THE GIANT A FILM BY JOHANNES NYHOLM

Sweden, Denmark - 2016 - Color - 90 minutes - 1:85 - Dolby

Swedish release date: October 14, 2016

Synopsis

Rikard is an autistic and severely deformed man who was separated from his mother at birth. Thirty years later he is convinced that he will get her back if only he wins the Scandinavian Championship of pétanque (bocce). He tries to do the impossible. His fragile physique and a harsh judging environment are not going to stop him. Plus there is a 200 foot giant on his side...

Johannes Nyholm About The Giant

THE GIANT is about alienation, and the methods used to put up with it. My point is that unhappiness and misery has a place in all of us, in different doses and in different ways. And that it can be reflected and better understood when we relate it to something else, to someone who has it worse. Rikard here represents the one in the uttermost worst condition. And imagination is the force that saves him.

It is deeply personal motives and emotions that have shaped this story, but I hope I have managed to translate these to a universal level that makes it accessible to a wider audience.

I wanted to create a documentary feel to the story, in the same way as in my short The Puppet boy (2008, not to be confused with my short The tale of the little Puppet boy). I filmed as much as possible authentic environments and people in order to get the documentary style. To have the feeling of what we see is for real. And Rikard to be a bold contrast to the documentary style. He is so different from what we are used to see, different to ordinary people. The realistic style in contrast to the absurd. Rikard is blatant in his appearance but at the same time unreal like a fantasy figure. During the progress of the film his world slowly transforms from the ordinary to fantasy.

Meet up with the Puppet Master

He is one of Sweden's most celebrated and most spectacular short film directors. Now Johannes Nyholm is up for his feature film debut, The Giant

At the start of The Giant (Jätten), the camera glides over a magnificent mountain landscape of postcardlike beauty. The evening sky glows with rosy clouds and mist gently rolls in the valleys. But wait: what's this? There on the ground are two huge silver coloured boules close to a red wooden ball.

There's only one thing that isn't surprising about this unusual combination of the mountains and boules. And that's the fact that Johannes Nyholm is the man behind it.

Throughout his entire career as an artist, animator and film and music video director, Nyholm has been surprising his audiences with his original images and stories, from a Claymation about a small boy who's nervous ahead of a date to his film Las Palmas (2011), in which a one-year-old girl plays a dissipated tourist breaking social taboos.

The trailer for Las Palmas has notched up more than 19 million hits on YouTube, and Nyholm's short films have been screened at art museums and film festivals the world over, including Cannes.

The Giant is his first feature length film."I want to mix kitchen sink realism with fantasy in order to create two worlds that collide," he explains.

The boules are part of everyday reality for the film's main character, Rikard. Passionately interested in playing boules (a.k.a. pétanque), he is disabled and lives in a care home, although he has no defined diagnosis.

The friction between Rikard and those around him is shown in dramatic relief when he gets hit on the head by a metal boule. Out of natural concern, the Boules Society committee rules that it is too risky for Rikard to take part in the Nordic Championships.

With few allies, Rikard struggles to take control over his life, just as he might in a fantasy story. One of Nyholm's acknowledged sources of inspiration is Astrid Lindgren's timeless novel The Brothers Lionheart (Bröderna Lejonhjärta, 1973), in which the fantasy land of Nangijala becomes a place of escape for an ill-fated boy who's confined to bed.

In The Giant, the mountain landscape represents Rikard's inner world, one in which he's a giant with the power to put everything right. The mountains are presented in a glowing palette of colours bordering on the kitsch.

Johannes Nyholm jumps up from the chair in the kitchen of the premises in Göteborg that he shares with various other filmmakers and goes to fetch a mass-produced poster. It shows a man and woman embracing in dark silhouette against a colourful sunset.

"If you've never seen an image like this before you'd probably think it's powerful. But the problem with kitsch is that it has been reproduced so many times that it becomes banal. I want to create images that are powerful yet can be taken seriously at the same time. That's the challenge."

Christian Andrén, who plays the lead in the film, is present in virtually every scene wearing a mask of a grossly deformed face over his own. It took three and a half hours every day to apply and made heavy demands on Christian as an actor.

"I've worn a mask before when we made Puppetboy (Dockpojken, 2008)," says Nyholm, "so I know how it is when the people around you see something different when they look at you. You have to be secure enough in yourself to handle being invisible. When Christian got out of the mask he just couldn't stop talking. He made a thank you speech at the wrap party that's gone down in history," the director quips.

Nyholm chose the rather unusual settings for the film based on places he knew, and some scenes were also shot in real boules clubs and care homes in and around Göteborg.

"It's easiest to tell stories about people you're familiar with. Myself, I've played a lot of boules and I've also worked in care homes, where you'll find a collection of people who are very different from each other. It's a fascinating and dynamic milieu in which anything can happen."

In the portrayal of people's diminishing goodwill towards Rikard, or at worst their open contempt, there is a strong case for inferring social criticism. Does Johannes Nyholm regard himself as a political filmmaker?

"Everything's political. But The Giant is basically more of a film about an individual trying to survive in his environment. I want to present a reality in which people recognise themselves, and also to provide hope that there's something beyond it all. No matter how terrible things are there's always a chink of light from another world."
